COURSE DESCRIPTION:

Traces historical foundations of health, recreation, physical education, and sport.

This course traces the development of sport, physical education, recreation, and health from the ancient Greek period to the present. Through the utilization of scholarly interpretations, students examine a variety of topics, including the role of physical education in ancient Greek culture, nature of sport in Renaissance society, the interrelationship between exercise and health in nineteenth century America, and the rising interest in physical culture in contemporary society. Particular attention is devoted to the role of various ethnic and racial groups in American sport and the health, recreation, and physical education professions.

COURSE OBJECTIVES:

At the completion of this course students should be able to:

1. Describe how recreation, physical education, health, and sport developed as they moved from a pre-industrial to a postindustrial culture.
2. Demonstrate the interrelationship between sport and the health, physical education, and recreation professions in contemporary American society.
3. Identify the major trends in society and how they influenced the recreation, health, and physical education professions.
4. Describe the role played by various ethnic and racial groups in sport, physical education, health, and recreation.
